Awakening Wyomingite Unity at Mills Spring Ranch »

Nestled in the shade of pines in the Casper Mountains of Wyoming, the Mills Spring Ranch (MSR) features a genuine campout feel, perfect for the Arise Wyoming Campout, held July 12 - 17. Arise Wyoming, a new installment of Awaken Wyoming, attracted a record 400 Seventh-day

Adventists, young and old, from the cowboy state, said Rajmund Dabrowski, RMC communication director.

Arise Wyoming included musical talents, as Matt and Josie Winikus, the hometown Sage Creek Gospel Band, and the junior and state fiddle champs blessed the congregation with tunes inspired through love for Jesus Christ. Other festivities of the closing day included Al Williams’ retirement, the ordination of Jason Logan of the Wyoming southwest, and an inspirational, enthusiastic series on the Book of Acts by David Asscherick.

The tone of the whole event: peacefully down-to-earth. Dotting the campsite like sliced jalapeños on a pizza were handfuls of colorful tents and motorhomes. A few cabins could be found scattered in the forest. The end of the pine needle and cone laden path revealed a weathered, log-supported lean-to used as a storage facility. Gushes of wind occasionally wound through the small camp as worship music drifted from the chapel. People convened outdoors to enjoy the rustic scenery while eating with their friends and family.

A truly authentic Western camp, the 200-acre land acquired in 1964 through a donation by the Mills family to the Wyoming Conference of Seventh-day Adventists offers several hiking trails, meadows, an archery range and golf course. It was this year’s camp meeting that offered the participants a newly completed deck, where meals were served, with a “stunning view for miles and miles,” Dabrowski commented. Although simple, the camp offers a truly communal feel, just as would a family gathering.

“That’s Wyoming,” shared Jesse Evert, a Casper native. “As far as politically and spiritually, it’s very conservative and untouched. Casper is the biggest city in Wyoming, with about 75,000-80,000 people, including the surrounding areas.”

Jesse, entering her junior year of Language Arts Education with a minor in History Education, visited her hometown of Casper to recruit for Union College. “I love Mills Spring,” she passionately shared. “It might as well be my second home. I live right down the mountain and have been going to camp, camp meeting, Pathfinders, and church socials here every year of my life. I know it like the back of my hand.” MSR has not changed much—at least not in the 20 years she’s been frequenting the camp.

In a land as barren as The Cowboy State, the least populated in the nation, one can’t help but wonder why Wyoming? “Wyoming especially needs the summer camp program because in Wyoming there are not many Adventist schools. A lot of our kids don’t get a chance to go to our schools, and it’s an opportunity for them to spend a week learning about Jesus and fellowship with other young people with whom they can relate,” explained RMC president Ed Barnett. “This gives them a chance to get together. It’s powerful for the young people in developing their community during the youth week.”

Unlike Glacier View Ranch, all of MSR’s 50 kid campers are constituent members of the Seventh-day Adventist Church. Steve Hamilton, RMC youth ministries director, agrees with Jesse that MSR has been consistent over the last few years, the exception being a new outside deck attached to the cafeteria, added on by his father and others, such as Don Hill who works as a volunteer cook for RMC summer camps.

Camp meeting attendee Howard Bogue added that the campout offers opportunities for Adventist adults to encourage, thank, and pray for one another. A church member from Upton, Wyoming, he recognizes the importance of spiritual and social communion. He said, “Wyoming is special in the sense that the population is sparse, and you don’t get lost in the crowd. Everyone is family. Our congregations are fairly small, but coming together is the family spirit. This isn’t the easiest place to get to, but it’s the spirit of Wyoming.”

No matter who you talk to, it seems the best thing about Wyoming is the people. Grace Logan, wife of Jason Logan who was ordained in front of the congregation, shared that the camp meeting gave her and her family a chance to reconnect and

Story Guidelines: We want to share your news! »

News Nuggets is your publication. We strive to provide news and information expressing our church life. Every church, every family, every individual has a story to tell. We are inviting pastors and secretaries of churches and institutions within the Rocky Mountain Conference to share with us relevant information – about developments, issues, notable events, as well as experiences of church members.

Please email your story to nuggets@rmcsda.org so we rebuild spiritual connections with other people. “I’ve known ever since I’ve been with my husband Jason that he always wanted to be a pastor, and we’ve always been in ministry since we got married, so this is a realization of a dream for him,” she said in reference to his ordination. “And it’s always been part of my dream because it’s his. God’s led us step-by-step to this point; we will continue following Him step-by-step.” Nevertheless, for the Logans it was a humbling experience to witness the recognition and support of their family, and most importantly of what God has done in their lives.

Through the attendees God also reaches other individuals in Wyoming who are absent from the camp meeting.

Howard, who doubles as a part-time electrical contractor, shared that the connection and support forged through MSR also aids in the spiritual development of inmates. For example, Howard meets with another Seventh-day Adventist Wyomingite at these meetings. As a part of prison ministries, he said he calls his friend, Scott, a native of Gillette, Wyoming, to see if he can help with finding jobs for Newcastle inmates. Now, thanks to the friendship forged between these two and the help they give, they are witnessing results from an inmate known as Brandon. “He is flourishing and we hope to baptize him,” enthused Howard, who claimed the story is an encouragement and a blessing, as he witnesses another individual begin walking the path with Jesus.

Wyoming offers Yellowstone National Park, Oregon trail wagon tracks, pioneer grave sites, numerous national landmarks, trademark bison burgers, and untouched prairie as far as the eye can see. Most importantly, it offers a place to unify in the Spirit of Christ.

Awaken Wyoming's Al Williams Retires Again »

Not many people retire three times in one lifetime, but Al Williams is not an average kind of guy. Spanning 45 years and crossing several states, Al’s career is coming to another close. His Wyoming connection began in 1986 when he pastored the Casper congregation. Most recently, he served as assistant to the president for the church’s Wyoming affairs.

The Wyoming territory is large and sparse of population. Its largest city boasts fewer than 60,000 and Adventist presence is an optimistic 1,200.

“You can drive on Highway 59 between Douglas and Gillette,” explains VP for administration Eric Nelson, “and, for more than an hour, see only one ranch.”

In other words, Wyoming members live in remote areas and are fairly isolated.

“There hadn’t been much happening in the state of Wyoming and churches were closing down,” Jason Logan, pastor for five churches in southwest Wyoming, explains about the condition of the churches before Awaken Wyoming. “There was a consensus that something needed to change.”

Enter Al Williams.

In tandem with retired pastor Gordon Henderson, Al birthed the idea of Awaken Wyoming, an evangelistic thrust for the state. The idea touched a courageous nerve in Wyoming members, and inspired giving to the tune of $250,000 in monies and pledges by the end of the 2013 camp meeting.

“This is one of the most generous fundraising events per capita we’ve seen,” explains Eric.

And Al has, “given structure, organization, and boundaries for the use of these monies,” Eric continues. “He became the fundraiser himself and a director” for the program.

At an informal farewell held at 2016 Wyoming camp meeting, Gordon Henderson paid tribute. “Al led us through the good as well as the difficult times. He would often say, ‘I’m just making this up,’ and go on to make a point that was most often right on target.”

Al’s Awaken Wyoming brainchild has energized Wyoming members to be more mindful of evangelism. It “perked them up quite a bit,” says Eric, “and brought the enthusiasm to advance evangelism in Wyoming.”

“It has almost doubled the ministers in Wyoming,” says newly-ordained pastor Jason Logan, when looking at the “pastors and Bible workers,” that we now have.

“It has given Wyoming membership something to unite on and pull us together,” Jason continues. It provides a “motivation across the state for people to be active.”

“I’ve known Al for 16 years,” comments RMC president Ed Barnett, “and I’ve always appreciated working with him. He will be missed dearly.”

Al has filled many roles for the Rocky Mountain Conference, but his special passion is the people of Wyoming, whom he wants to continue serving in retirement. His third retirement includes “plans for service,” Al remarks when asked how many more times he would retire.

“I’ll continue to preach and hold spiritual growth seminars,” says Al, “and grow my marriage and family therapy ministry, which was cut to a couple of clients per week. And I’ll be raising funds for various Rocky Mountain Conference entities.”

Campion Alumna uses Engineering for Service »

For the last two years, Kathrin Klemm has been involved with Walla Walla’s chapter of Engineers Without Borders (EWB), taking the technical lead last year in the international project. Working with the mountain community in Pampachiri, Peru (elevation 14,500’), Kathrin and the rest of her engineering team designed and implemented a gravity-fed water system that ensures a clean water source for the entire community.

Kathrin graduated from Walla Walla University’s School of Engineering in June as one of seven females in a class of 44. Not only is she encouraging other girls to pursue engineering, she’s taking her passion for engineering and combining it with her desire to serve others.

Kathrin first decided to pursue civil engineering because she was interested in humanitarian work. “Campion’s emphasis on missions was a big thing for me. That helped me want to choose a career that I could use to make a tangible difference in the world,” she said. After her first mission trip to Belize with Joe Martin in 2009, she has continued to prioritize service to others.

Because of her experience with EWB, she has been invited to speak at Southern Adventist University’s TEAMS Forum (Transforming and Educating Ambassadors for Mission and Service). One of the goals of the forum is to encourage sustainability of the mission projects sponsored by the Adventist Church. “It’s something I’ve become really passionate about,” said Kathrin. “I’m excited to start sharing this with the Adventist community. It’s such a conscious approach to mission work.”

She credits Campion Academy, from which she graduated in the class of 2011, with not only inspiring her mission-mindedness, but also giving her confidence in her field. “I was in Joe Martin’s LE program, which taught me how to talk to strangers,” she explained. As a student grader for calculus, pre-calculus, and chemistry, she became comfortable in the world of science.

Kathrin also described Walla Walla as a haven, and reported mostly supportive attitudes from her male cohorts, yet the greater engineering field can be much less supportive of women. She remembers her first year in the engineering program was challenging, both because freshman year is a “weeding-out” year and because students questioned her choice of field. “I met people who would say, ‘You don’t look like an engineer. You don’t act like an engineer.’ I think a lot of people, when confronted with that kind of attitude, would start second-guessing themselves.”

In the United States, fewer than 20 percent of engineering bachelor’s degrees are earned by women, reported PBS Newshour.

Before graduating, Kathrin posted this appeal on her Facebook page: “Don’t tell your friends, daughters, or sisters that they don’t ‘seem’ like engineers. Tell them that their perspective and skills are invaluable and that they can do amazing things for their world. We need them.”

Kathrin will begin work in August as a naval architect with the Puget Sound Naval Shipyard where she’ll be working on barges that carry retired nuclear reactors to their disposal site.

Revelation Seminar Series Leads to 17 Baptisms »

The Prophecy Seminars, led by Pastors Jim Stevens and Wayne Gayton, resulted in 17 baptisms at the Piñon Hills Seventh-day Adventist Church, May 18 - July 18. The seminar was an in-depth, chapter by chapter study of Revelation.

Pastor Jim Stevens and his wife Rita visited the Piñon Hills Church of Farmington, New Mexico, to lead a six-week series on Revelation called the Prophecy Seminars. The resulting baptisms brought 17 new members into the church.

Due to its success, the series was extended to cover another two months. The church’s pastor Wayne Gayton has led the Wednesday night and Sabbath morning Revelation studies.

Each attendee, if present for 25 or more of the meetings, received a new family Bible, a copy of Strong's Concordance, and a box-set of the Conflict of Ages series by Ellen G. White.

Two New Members Join Montrose Church »

Two brothers, Jacob and Gabriel Anaya, publicly demonstrated their commitment to Christ through baptism, June 18, at the Montrose Seventh-day Adventist Church.

After studying key biblical issues and what it means to live a life of walking with Jesus, Pastor Fritz Krieger asked them if baptism was something they wanted. The teenage brothers exclaimed, "Yes, we do!" before donning toothy grins. A unanimous vote from the congregation, along with enthusiastic applause and hearty amens, welcomed them to the local fellowship of believers and the Seventh-day Adventist Church.

Many influences played a part in their decision, including family, a church-affiliated school, Sabbath school, Pathfinders, friends, church involvement—including participating in leading worship music and acting as junior deacons—and joining in social and outreach activities.
