125 Join Youth Rally From Front Range » "The Blaze" Youth Rally, organized by the RMC Youth Department and hosted by Vista Ridge Academy, was held October 15 and attracted over 125 young people from the Front Range.

Headlining the worship service, Steve Hamilton presented a message on the story of Zacchaeus. Relating to the various details of the story, Steve's appeal was not to lose sight of Jesus because of encounters with people. Jesus goes out of His way to actively seek each person in our world, and sometimes, as in the case of Zacchaeus, we must run ahead and overcome obstacles while risking our worldly image in our pursuit of Jesus.

A praise and worship team with musicians from Campion Academy, Mile High Academy and other local schools played an inspiring set of music.

The prayer wall, a favorite of the "Hot Spot" youth groups, provided a chance for the youth to make their prayers real by writing them on sticky notes and placing them on a public wall.

The youth rally held on Saturday night was the largest of "Hot Spot" youth groups. Hot Spot youth groups are roving programs that occur monthly at various churches in the Denver-metro area. The mission of "Hot Spot" is to provide an avenue where youth from many different churches in the Denver metro area, especially the many Seventh-day Adventist churches in and around Denver, can interact with each other, receive training, worship together, and engage in community outreach at least once a month. "Hot Spots" are intended to be places where kids can get to know God and each other. These groups are generally smaller because only the local youth attend. "I really enjoy seeing the prayers of my friends piling up on the wall," said one Denver Metro youth.

"It's also nice to take one or two of the requests after the service and prayer for them during the week," said another.

During the rally, participants engaged in praise and worship as well as play activities, including ice-breaker contest games, basketball, volleyball, capture-the-flag, and board games. They also enjoyed excellent food and a delicious ice-cream bar prepared by Pat Chapman and Diane Harris from the RMC Education department, assisted by Gaby Delgado from "Hot Spot."

Following Pastor Steve's message, everyone pitched in to clear the gym in preparation for playing games. "The open gym is the best," said CJ, a local youth who attends public school in the area. During the recreation time, there were several pickup basketball and volleyball games, as well as an extensive game of knock-out basketball. Outside of the gym, other youth were busy socializing, playing games and sprinting up and down the soccer field while playing glow-in-the-dark capture the flag. Echoing the sentiments of the rest of the RMC Youth department, Matt Moreland, an assistant youth director, said it was important to bring our young people together to "give them opportunity to get to know each other outside of school. There was a very diverse group of kids who came together and had an excellent time. We hope to continue to see big turnouts at our future events."

It was clear, after the awards ceremony Saturday night, why this theme was chosen as many communicators are making their mark in the Adventist world and touching lives through their efforts.

The convention opened Thursday with media tours of the NBC Uplink facility and Karsh & Hagan Communications. Stefani Leeper, Union College senior, toured the advertising company Karsh & Hagan and commented that the experience was aimed toward individuals involved in PR and marketing. It was interesting "to see how the company works with customers and clients" and how "very busy" employees are as they face "lots of deadlines." "The tour was very informative," Stefani stated appreciatively.

Dustin Comm, local e-book author of The Media Story: Why Your Church Needs Media to Engage Your Local Community took part in the "Best Practices in Social Media" panel followed by a series of presenters who took the stage to share ideas on such topics as "The Branding Journey," trademarks, continuing education and handling crisis.

chili and salad as they talked shop and networked.

Friday morning saw a surprise visit by North American Division president Dan Jackson who made the trip to Denver to address the assembly concerning the recent Annual Council action on compliance with church policies. He clarified that narrowing the action to the issue of ordination of women in ministry would be to misrepresent the voted appeal for compliance. His candid, heart-felt talk was meant to encourage in the face of these church challenges and to affirm women in ministry. He appealed to communicators to "not sit on our hands," but to "break the silence" and speak out in truth how we feel about life in the church, its mission and its future.

In response to Dan Jackson's talk, Rocky Mountain Conference communication director Rajmund Dabrowski stated, "Dan Jackson is a leader that embraces open communication. We often hide our true feelings and report on developments in ways that aim at protecting status quo. We talk differently among ourselves, but go mum when speaking out is in order. Personally, I felt I was in the presence of someone who speaks my language and inspires me," Dabrowski expressed.

Twelve workshops offered in three sets throughout the morning and afternoon gave communicators opportunity to choose the option that fit their interests. Workshops included branding, broadcast media, graphic design, social media, crisis communication, photography and others, offering multiple experiences in continuing education.

The day wrapped up in the evening panel presentation, "How to Use Communication Skills to Reach Our Communities".

Saturday dawned clear and warm for the bus trip to Garden of the Gods in Colorado Springs with hiking, photo tours and box lunches as features of the Sabbath experience. The weekend theme, "Keep Climbing," was especially apropos. Becky de Oliveira from Boulder Church spoke on the theme and expressed a conviction that "reaching the top of a mountain [a goal, perhaps] is actually a beginning of a continuous climb."

The weekend was brought to a climax on Saturday night with the awards banquet featuring the documentary, "A Certain Kind of Light" showcasing the life and work of Dr Wil Alexander at Loma Linda University. A moving documentary, it tells the story of a man "who dared to bring the art and science of story into every patient experience. Providing the

No Age Limits for Blogging Your Story and Sharing Your Faith Â»

Betty Callahan is an 81-year-old blogger.

Just a few years ago, she wasn't even computer literate. Her trajectory from computer illiterate to blogger is an interesting story.

As a volunteer for the Thompson School District at Garfield

Elementary School in Loveland, Betty spent several hours each day for a number of years helping in the classroom. She also supported the summer reading program as well as the math program.

Wanting to "turn on the light" for these kids as was done for her when math presented a challenge during her school years, she invested time opening to them the mysteries of math.

After a summer break, she returned to her volunteering in the fall to learn that her kids had earned the Erwin Award for the biggest improvement in math.

"Grama, you helped us with that!" they exclaimed.

Betty doesn't even remember the name of the little fourth grader who taught her how to use the computer. Spending one day during recess and lunchtime, the youngster patiently showed her how to use email, a word processing program, the Internet.

And Betty saw steady progress in her own computer competence.

Her introduction to the Seventh-day Adventist Church is also an interesting story. That came about after she discovered the book, Steps to Christ.

interesting story. As she read, she compared its contents with the Bible and found no discrepancies. Reading while doing laundry in the common area of her apartment building, Betty was asked by another resident, "You reading that trash? Why mine went into File 13."

"Lady," Betty answered, "what is in this little book, I have found in God's Word."

Betty never in her life thought she would condone being a Seventh-day Adventist. To her, it was the "wrong church." But that little book and the Word of God changed her mind in a hurry.

After this experience, Betty called a Seventh-day Adventist friend to ask if she could attend the Campion church with her. The then pastor, Eric Nelson, studied the Bible with her and she joined the church by profession of faith. Later, she moved to the Loveland Church.

Her blogging began when Loveland pastor Jack Bohannon, who had been writing a Sabbath message which he sent out by email each Friday, went to Uganda for a few months. Betty began filling in during his absence. When he returned, he said, "Keep doing it." So she did.

She maintains four blogs today--one that gives her story and includes music videos and sermons; another created mostly for women that gives health and beauty hints along with uplifting thoughts; a spiritual blog with news about the Seventh-day Adventist Church and stories of the faith experience (it also includes the Lifting Up Jesus Bible studies); and one with the Sabbath School quarterly.

Youth Rally Brings Together 125 Front Range Young People » “The Blaze” Youth Rally, organized by the RMC Youth Department, and hosted by Vista Ridge Academy, was held October 15 and attracted over 125 young people from from the Front Range. Headlining the worship service, Steve Hamilton delivered a powerful message on the story of Zaccheus. A praise and worship team consisting of youth from Champion Academy, Mile High Academy, and other local schools, played an inspiring set of music.

The prayer wall, a favorite of the Hot Spot youth group, provided a chance for the youth to make their prayers real by writing them on sticky-notes and placing them on a public wall. “I really enjoy seeing the prayers of my friends piling up on the wall,” said one Denver Metro youth. “It’s also nice to take one or two of the requests after the service and pray for them during the week,” said another.

During the rally, participants engaged in praise and worship as well as play activities, including ice-breaker contest games, basketball, volleyball, capture-the-flag, and board games. They also enjoyed excellent food and a delicious ice-cream bar prepared by Pat Chapman and Diane Harris from the RMC Education department, assisted by Gabby Delgado from Hot Spot.

Following Pastor Steve’s message, everyone pitched in to clear the gym in preparation for playing games. “The open gym is the best,” said CJ, a local youth who attends public school in the area. “Grimma, you helped us win that!” they exclaimed

Betty doesn’t even remember the name of the little fourth grader who taught her how to use the computer. Spending one day per week during recess and lunchtime, the youngster patiently showed her how to use email, a word processing program, and the Internet. And Betty saw steady progress in her own computer competence.

Her introduction to the Seventh-day Adventist Church is also an interesting story. That came about after she discovered the book, “Steps to Christ.” As she read, she compared its content with the Bible and found no discrepancies. Reading while doing laundry in the common area of her apartment building, Betty was asked by another resident, “You reading that trash? Why mine went into File 13.”

“Lady,” Betty answered, “what is in this little book, I have found in God’s Word.”

Betty never in her life thought she would condone being a Seventh-day Adventist. To her, it was the “wrong church.” But that little book and the Word of God changed her mind in a hurry.

After this experience, Betty called a Seventh-day Adventist friend to ask if she could attend the Campion church with her. Then pastor Eric Nelson studied the Bible with her and she joined the church by profession of faith. Later she moved to the Loveland Church.

Her blogging began when Loveland pastor Jack Bohannon, who had been writing a Sabbath message which he sent out by email each Friday, went to Uganda for a few months. Betty began filling in during his absence. When he returned, he said, “Keep doing it.” So she did.

She maintains four blogs today—one that gives her history and includes music videos and sermons; another created mostly for women that gives health and beauty hints along with uplifting thoughts; a spiritual blog with news about the Seventh-day Adventist Church and stories of the faith experience

(it also includes the Lifting Up Jesus Bible studies);
and one with the Sabbath School quarterly.
